Social Distancing Games for Children

We thought we would share with you some of the games that we have been playing in school in light of the rules relating to social distancing.

There are some great ideas for games and we thought we would share a link that you may find useful. Each game has a video tutorial if needed and each set of game rules can be downloaded and printed for reference.

Sending Hugs and Smiles to Margaret House Care Home

Unfortunately, friends and family are unable to visit the residents at Margaret House at the moment and the residents are feeling quite lonely.

Consequently, Three Rivers District Council have asked the children in our local community to help brighten the day of someone in Margaret House by writing them a letter, making a card or drawing a picture.

Please send your creations to:
Margaret House Care Home,
Parsonage Close,

Remember to add only first names and to mention your school.

Microhabitats Enquiry - Survey

I found out that habitat one had more spiders than butterflies this is because butterfly can't live under stars.

Look carefully at your two habitats. Count up the number of each kind of minibeast that you find there.

Taller than a house the iron man stood at the top of a tall cliff, on the very brink in the darkness.

The wind whistled through his iron fingers as big long as a human. His big iron head shook like a dustbin turning slowly to the right then to left. His iron ears as big as it would be if you left it in the rain turned this way and that way he was hearing the sea. His eyes like beach lamps glowed white then red then iron red searching the sea like never before. Never before had the iron man seen the sea. He stood swayed in the strong heavy wind that pushed against his back.

L.O: To use emotive language to describe

His frost bitten hands held the small essence of light that remained inside his bruised body. All he could hear was the panic in her shriek from yesterday. The bitterness of the wind swished around him as if she, his only love, had her arms around him. All it was was a walk to the flower shop for their wedding with no realization that that would be the end of their relationship and then he heard a bang and a shriek. She through the flowers in the air and he caught them the lily's, the flower with her name on them. She was his summer and he was her winter, he so blue and harsh. She so red and luscious. The grey two seater bench sat there all alone like him. Jack Lilies in the hospital on the brink of death whilst Jack cries tears of ice. The red lily's were his hope in the world. The pitch black sky shone on the blue, frozen lamp. The stars of life she called them as they shone so bright this very night. The white, trodden footsteps created a small broken heart. This was meant to be the wedding day all the opportunity slipped through his fingers. The sweetness in her voice was like candy, but now that candy was broken.

L.O: To investigate what life was like for soldiers in the trenches

Dear Madam,

I am currently writing from the village with 4 other old, ruddy soldiers. Today was very hectic it started raining, when we were passing No. 6 man's land ready to fight. A tired soldier slipped ^{and slid} across the battle field a few times, ^{and} ^{then} he was left in grime for a while. ^{until} he had a new uniform.

Tomorrow

Tomorrow we have to use the dusty firesteps so we can have our guns by our sides. I can still smell dust and smoke from earlier, I can hear worried soldiers shouting to their mates, All I taste is nothing... as is

Year 6 English by Maya

English

It had been three months since it had happened. It had been three months since she had seen another living soul. She had to be brave if she was to make it through...

As she lifted up the baggy, orange jumpsuit to creep through the tinted weeded grass, a deer's head shot up, startled, and speedily galloped away, into the fallen trees.

Whatever had happened, had wiped out all civilisation. She had sheltered herself in a small white shack - living off of mysterious berries, that may or may not have been poisonous, but she ^{was} willing to do anything to survive. Animals were quivering and paranoid of every sudden movement. Leafy undergrowth, vines and weeds had smothered - swallowed the ground and smothered every shattered window and every decrepit broken tractor that had rusted on the ground.

The young girl was knee deep in weeds, strudging through the land like a soldier in war. She was still clueless as to the events of October 31st 4091...

News headlines were blasting statements all day of a possible leak of something bad... something life threatening. Her father was working all day on his "Jetset" business (flying cars) and her mother was a ^{young} teacher in reception.

She was home alone - scared - but slightly optimistic. "Nothing is ^{wrong}." News people are always spitting nonsense," she thought carelessly, "News people are always spitting nonsense." Little did she know that only minutes later, that leak would send the world into chaos.
